The Wrong of Abortion

These defenders of abortion raise the question: Where does one draw the line between those who are subjects of rights and those that are not? A long tradition says that the line should be drawn at persons But what is a person, if not an entity that has self-awareness, rationality, etc? This argument is based on a ...

Phenomenology of pregnancy and the ethics of abortion

Phenomenology of pregnancy and the ethics of abortion nomenclature could guide our views on the rights and/or wrongs of abortion To my knowledge very few phenom-enologists have directed their attention toward this issue (but see Mumford 2013), although quite a few have, indeed,

Rosalind Hursthouse - "Virtue Theory and Abortion"

Abortion •The discourse on abortion generally is focused on two considerations: the status of the fetus, and women's rights Consider "pro-life" versus "pro-choice" positions •Hursthouse thinks that this framing of the issues can be limited and myopic She wants to explore how virtue ethics might direct one to think about abortion in
